The City of Expo '70

The Japan World Expo held here in 1970 was an incredible success, drawing in 64 million people from all around the world. Expo '70 Commemorative Park was made to honor both this success and the expo's theme of "Progress and Harmony for Mankind," and was built on the location of the expo pavilions as a cultural park covered with lush, natural scenery. Some facilities from the expo remain today, including the Tower of the Sun, the Japanese Garden, Geihinkan (guest house), and the Japan Folk Crafts Museum, Osaka. Additionally, with the establishment of the National Museum of Ethnology, the Steel Pavilion was reborn as the EXPO '70 Pavilion. The Natural and Cultural Gardens offer a chance to get closer to nature, enjoying the plants that grow there throughout the seasons, and draw in large crowds during weekends and holidays. The surrounding area is also home to a number of sports facilities, including the Suita City Football Stadium.

In 1889, plans for Asahi Beer's first brewery were decided upon, and two years later construction was complete in the then village of Suita. With high quality groundwater, easy transport along the railways and rivers, and close proximity to the market Osaka provided, Suita offered an ideal location. Even today, around 130 years later, Asahi Beer is still one of the biggest companies in Suita and helps support the livelihood of the people who live here. The scenery around the site, the trees lined up in rows, the brick factory, and the steel aging tanks are a major part of the scenery of the city today. The slight beer aroma in the air is another one of Suita's unique qualities. Reservations can be made to tour the brewery and get a taste of freshly made draft beer.

Suita City has long been a strategic transportation point on both land and water. With the market of Osaka close nearby, Suita Station was established in 1876, and the city grew alongside its railways. The Suita Switchyard in particular, put into operation in 1923, was said to be the greatest in all of Asia. With 150 km of tracks in total and a capacity for handling 6,000 cars daily, it remained the best switchyard in all of Japan until it was put out of commission in 1984. Today, JR, Hankyu, Osaka Monorail, Kita-Osaka Kyuko, and Osaka Metro lines run through Suita City, and the city is home to 16 stations, train yards, and depots, making it a true city of railways.

The City of Culture & History

Located between Kyoto and the other areas of western Japan, Suita was a bustling center of economic and cultural exchange. Because of this, there are numerous remains and traditions that have been left behind throughout the ages. (Those who wish to tour the Former Nishio and Nakanishi residences should contact the establishments.)

GAMBA OSAKA Gamba Osaka

The City of Sports

The pro soccer team Gamba Osaka plays to the cheers of countless fans here at their home stadium, Panasonic Stadium Suita.

The city is also home to a number of nature-rich parks, and the people who live here stay healthy by jogging, walking, and staying active.

The City with Lush Nature

Places like Senri New Town and the bamboo grove offer green, natural scenery year-round. In spring, cherry blossoms bloom in areas throughout the city, and the beautiful sight of the rhododendrons at Shikinzan Park is enough to steal your breath away. In early summer, fireflies dance through the night air around Takamachi Pond, and in fall the foliage at Sanshikisaido and other locations paint the city with color.

The City of Transportation

In preparation for the Japan Expo, new traffic infrastructure was constructed. The Shin-Midosuji road connected the city to the center of Osaka, and Suita Junction connected the Meishin, Chugoku, and Kinki expressways. Osaka International Airport and the shinkansen station at Shin-Osaka are also close nearby, offering the city excellent transportation links to far away areas and easy access to Kyoto, Osaka, and Kobe.

The City Where Citizens Shine

In addition to tourism, many volunteers work to tackle local issues in various situations such as disaster prevention, economics, the environment, education, culture, sports, and welfare. A number of events are held in the city at locations such as Expo '70 Commemorative Park.

and regularly see large crowds in attendance. At every turn, you will find the people of Suita at work making their city a better place.

The City of Education & Research

Osaka University Osaka Gakufn University

Kansal University Senri Kinran University

Yamato University National Museum of Ethnology

The population of Suita City has one of the largest proportions of university students in all of Japan. It is home to 5 universities and an additional research institution, Osaka University, Osaka Gakuin University, Kansai University. Senri Kinran University. Yamato University, and National Museum of Ethnology (a research institute with graduate-level education facilities). It truly is a city of education and research.
